

A student workshop on (re)searching non-standard design avenues

The aim of the student workshop is to investigate new ways of posing valid design questions.

How can we gain an insight into our own ways of formulating design questions through understanding and 'translating' the other(s)?

How can we cross over analytical top-down mapping with bottom-up human-centered design approaches across scales and levels?

How do we question our own explorative tools to investigate the city, and its inhabitants, the locals and the foreigners, the community and the individual?

How do we exploit the unexpected and the unusual of the workshop experience to achieve that?

How can we map ourselves as designers among our peers, designing for Europe in the new Millenium?

Experience a one-week multicultural - multinational student workshop on small-to-large scale design.

The task of the workshop is to open up potential answers – rather than narrowing down to a single design proposal.

Coordination: The Aarhus School of Architecture, Denmark

Registration and information: chania@aarch.dk or ehsa-net@arch.auth.gr

Workshop fee: 200€ including accomodation, meals, materials.

lost in translations
accommodating the 'Other'
Student Workshop

www.enhsa.net

Chania
Crete Greece
26. - 31. august 2005

Education and Culture
Socrates
Erasmus

ENHSA
European Network of Heads of Schools of Architecture

European Association for Architectural Education